Electronic circuits activate a relay to connect the cordless telephone to your home. While several protection circuits are used to prevent unwanted signals, you may hear clicks or hear the relay activate while you are not using the HANDSET. If interference occurs frequently, it can be minimized or eliminated. You can check for interference before selecting the final BASE UNIT location. Federal Communications Commission Requirements. This equipment complies with Part 68 of FCC Rules. A label on the BASE UNIT of this equipment contains, among other information, the FCC Registration Number and the Ringer Equivalence Number (REN) for this equipment. The REN is also useful in determining the quantity of devices that you may use. In most areas, but not all, the sum of the RENs for all equipment should not exceed the maximum allowed for the telephone line. If your equipment should cause harm to the telephone network, the telephone company will be notified. However, when advance written notice is not possible, the telephone company may make changes in its service. Do not attempt to repair or modify this equipment. Warning: Changes or modifications not expressly approved by the party responsible for compliance with FCC rules may void the warranty. Some cordless telephones operate at frequencies that may cause interference to other electronic equipment. To minimize or prevent such interference, this equipment should not be used on coin telephone lines. Connection to a telephone line. If trouble is experienced, disconnect the HANDSET battery pack, be sure to charge the BASE UNIT. Federal Communications Commission Requirements continued. Note: This equipment has been tested and found to comply with the limits for Class B digital equipment. These limits are designed to provide protection against interference when the equipment is used in a residential environment. However, there is no guarantee that interference will not occur in a particular installation. Warranty Information. BellSouth Products. One Year Limited Warranty.
