For example, for rbokeh, you would use conda search frrbokeh. It includes approximately 80 of the most popular Works with vectors, matrices, and higherdimensional arrays. The backports are conditionally exported in order to let R resolve the function name to either the implemented backport, or the respective base version, if available. It also extends the methodology to regression models on a connected graph Wang and Emerson, 2015; this allows estimation of change point models with multivariate responses. A large part of Boost is provided as C template code which is resolved entirely at compiletime without linking. This package aims to provide the most useful subset of Boost libraries for template use among CRAN package. By placing these libraries in this package, we offer a more efficient distribution system for CRAN as replication of this code in the sources of other packages is avoided. Even for onetime boolean operations it can payoff to convert to bit, the payoff is obvious, when such components are used more than once.

Reading from and writing to bit is approximately as fast as accessing standard logicals mostly due to R's time for memory allocation. The package allows to work with preallocated memory for return values by calling `call_directly` when evaluating the speed of `Caccess` with preallocated vector memory, copying from bit to logical requires only 70% of the time for copying from logical to logical; and copying from logical to bit comes at a performance penalty of 150%. Class `integer64` can be used in vectors, matrices, arrays and `data.frames`. Methods are available for coercion from and to logicals, integers, doubles, characters and factors as well as many elementwise and summary functions. What if you want to put a vector of them in a data frame. These procedures return estimates with improved frequentist properties bias, mean squared error that are always finite even in cases where the maximum likelihood estimates are infinite data separation. Fitting takes place by fitting generalized linear models on iteratively updated pseudodata. More flexibility is provided by the fact that custom pseudodata representations can be specified and used for model fitting. This makes it easy to report results, create plots and consistently work with large numbers of models at once. `Broom` provides three verbs that each provide different types of information about a model. Since it uses the same backend for all output, copying across formats is WYSIWYG. Files are created without the dependence on X11 or other external programs. This device supports alpha channel semitransparent drawing and resulting images can contain transparent and semitransparent regions. It is ideal for use in server environments file output and as a replacement for other devices that don't have Cairo's capabilities such as alpha support or antialiasing.

To achieve reproducibility, the `checkpoint` function installs the packages required or called by your project and scripts to a local library exactly as they existed at the specified point in time. Only those packages are available to your project, thereby avoiding any package updates that came later and may have altered your results. In this way, anyone using `checkpoint`'s `checkpoint` can ensure the reproducibility of your scripts or projects at any time. Immediately after completion of the `rsync` mirror process, the process takes a snapshot, thus creating the archive. They fall back to alternatives on terminals that do not support Unicode. Qualitative, sequential, and diverging color palettes based on HCL colors are provided along with corresponding `ggplot2` color scales. In addition it exposes the markdown parse tree in xml format. Nested Archimedean copulas, related tools and special functions. Methods for density, distribution, random number generation, bivariate dependence measures, Rosenblatt transform, Kendall distribution function, perspective and contour plots. Fitting of copula models with potentially partly fixed parameters, including standard errors. Serial independence tests, copula specification tests independence, exchangeability, radial symmetry, extremevalue dependence, goodnessoffit and model selection based on crossvalidation. New styles can also be created easily. By eliminating underperforming candidates quickly and keeping promising candidates as long as possible, the method speeds up the computation while preserving the capability of a full crossvalidation. Additionally to the `CVST` the package contains an implementation of the ordinary `kfold` crossvalidation with a flexible and powerful set of helper objects and methods to handle the overall model selection process. The training data sample is transformed by a statistical depth function to a compact lowdimensional space, where the final classification is done.

The aim is to curate a collection of its stateoftheart variants that 1 do not sacrifice simplicity of design, 2 are essentially tuningfree, and 3 can be efficiently implemented directly in the R language. Use graph selections and traversals to apply changes to specific nodes or edges. A wide selection of graph algorithms allow for the analysis of graphs. Compute contrasts or linear functions of EMMs, trends, and comparisons of slopes. Plots and compact letter displays. The covered fields include techniques of explorative data analysis and the investigation of distributional properties, including parameter estimation and hypothesis testing. `Foreach` is an idiom that allows for iterating over elements in a collection, without the use of an explicit loop counter. This package in particular is intended to be used for its return value, rather than for its side effects. In that sense, it is similar to the standard `lapply` function, but doesn't require the evaluation of a function. It implements the Quickhull algorithm for computing the convex hull. Two recent additions are the `multipleresponse` Gaussian, and the grouped multinomial regression. Compute the top `n` matches between records. Currently it supports LaTeX and HTML output. Included are functions to compute betweenness centrality by utilizing Madduri and Bader's SNAP library, implementations of Burt's constraint and effective network size ENS metrics, Borgatti's algorithm to identify key players, and Valente's bridging metric. The package offers flexible, robust, high performance tools for working with JSON in R and is particularly powerful for building pipelines and interacting with a web API. The implementation is based on the mapping described in the vignette Ooms, 2014. Also interrogation of the maps and prediction using trained maps are supported. Lattice is sufficient for typical graphics needs, and is also flexible enough to handle most nonstandard requirements.

Mixture latent variable models and nonlinear latent variable models Holst and BudtzJoergensen 2019. This package must not be used by end users. The models and their components are represented using S4 classes and methods. A Kenward-Roger method is also available via the `pbrtest` package. Model selection methods include `step`, `drop1` and `anova` like tables for random effects `ranova`. The approximation uses Pareto smoothed importance sampling PSIS, a new procedure for regularizing importance weights. As a byproduct of the calculations, we also obtain approximate standard errors for estimated predictive errors and for the comparison of predictive errors between models. Compute contrasts or linear functions of leastsquares means, and comparisons of slopes. Plots and compact letter displays. Leastsquares means were proposed in Harvey, W 1960 Leastsquares analysis of data with unequal subclass numbers, Tech Report ARS208, USDA National Agricultural Library, and discussed further in Searle, Speed, and Milliken 1980 Population marginal means in the linear model An alternative to least squares means, The American Statistician 34, 216-221. The package includes methods for creating normal magic squares of any order greater than 2. The ultimate intention is for the package to be a computerized embodiment all magic square knowledge, including direct numerical verification of properties of magic squares such as recent results on the determinant of odd ordered semimagic squares. Some antimagic functionality is included. For more information, see package vignette. The `manipulate` function accepts a plotting expression and a set of controls e.g. `slider`, `picker`, `checkbox`, or `button` which are used to dynamically change values within the expression. There are additional functions that are comparable to APL functions which are useful for actuarial models such as pension mathematics. It includes a unified way to call different optimizers, and classes and methods to handle the results from the ML viewpoint.
